As we all look around, nothing but grass is visible for miles. There in the center, as I walk up, I take upon a wolf necklace and a katana. As I look to you all, I remember the awesome times I had, even though I've been here for a few months, it's been so fun being with you all. And as I take one last look at these forums I place my katana in the ground, to forever be remembered as a member of something great. I then place my necklace on the blade hilt and walk away, to never be seen to this place again. Shall you also make your contribution? Do you wish to be remembered? Place something here, in this land, to forever be remembered as I.

I leave stars, one for each and every one of us, even those who have already left, shining high in the sky, for us to be remembered by. They contain all the memories and happy times, and bad times we have had here. I hope when the time is right, someone will come find these stars, and remember all of us.

I gently bend over, gazing at this place with teary eyes. Slowly, I let go of a small chest and open it, giving everyone the chance to look at its keepsakes. Inside, are the blueprints of the Blue Wyrm Tavern, and Twenty-One Dump Street. I blink my eyes quickly, as if I am trying to prevent tears, "The Homies should know what we have made." I set down the blueprints, so whoever finds them can rebuild them from the ashes. Memories flood; I look up at HomeBase, "They'll tell the story of tonight.... Tomorrow there'll be more of us...." I sing softly, before flying away, fading into the sunrise like a ghostly memory.

Strange, leaving here. A wry smile played upon my lips as I thought about my time here. I've been here for a little more than a year. I realized with a start. And it's true. I made my first post on WoFMB in February of last year, died of embarrassment, then came back only a couple weeks ago. Already I'd grown attached to the forumers. I pulled a book titled, "Four Heroes" And a long dagger from my cloak. Setting the book on the ground next to the katana, I thrust the dagger through it and walked away, bittersweet.

I stand upon nothing but barren wasteland, but I remember, and so do all of you, that it was once a beautiful place, where people could laugh, love, and live, and while all of that is gone now, all of us who were improved by it will see this desert and remember how it was before. Before all of this, it was a place to celebrate; a place to rant; a place to explore; and a place to share your wonderful experiences, of which will now be reduced to dust.

Remember, that you are dust and to dust you will return, and that these forums are returning to their rightful place in the world, for everything is dust, and it will all return to dust once its time is up.

Slowly, I hold out my hand into the vast, thick air. I open my hands, and thousands of grains of gray, gray ashes spill out. They are seized by the wind and solar through the gray, gray sky, a sky that was once all shades of blue. These are the ashes of what was once life, life that laughed and loved and lived. Just like all of us will continue to do, long, long after this barren wasteland has been reduced to dust.

All that is dust will return to dust, and this is just one of the dusts that will return to its rightful form.

This was a place where people laughed, cried, remembered, and shared their stories. But now it is a barren wasteland. It's all gone. Memories will be forgotten, forumers lost, stories moved or destroyed. It was a place of wonder, for celebrating, for ranting, for RPing...but it has all melted away into the past, churned to dust. This place is not replaceable...it is like trying to give life to a dead body.

But hope remains, hidden and buried under mountains of sadness and forgotten. Because there is always a way.

I landed on a particularly barren spot, the foundation of my old homethread. I took a look at my golden maple leaf locket, the locket had been here since the day I joined. A river of tears began to flow down my cheeks as a grasped it in my fist and pulled with a quick motion. The chain around my neck snapped, and the golden maple leaf locket sat in the palm of my hand. I opened it for the first time since I had joined. Inside it was a small slip of paper, as well as a picture of my dear OC, Falcon. I unfolded the slip of paper. It read, stay together, as families should. We are all a family. No one gets left behind. I reached for my bow. Stay together, as families should raced around my mind as I threw the locket into the air, shot an arrow through it, and left the broken face of my Falcon lay to rest on the ruins of my homethread. "The thing I leave behind will be my memories," I said, turning my back to the shattered locket and walking into the sunset.

I fumble through a small bag and pulled out some crumpled up sheets, old character forms.
”I will leave these behind, for although the characters from these may be coming with me, this will always be the place they were created, I will also leave a note and a map, so that if any forumers that left before Becky's announcement come back, they'll know where we've gone". A few of the characters stood next to me, Snowfall, Poppy and Fog, Annabel, Bogong, Grevillea, Stagbeetle, Dragonbite, Osprey and my oldest, Peacock. I then head back into the mist.

As I hung my head, my OCs did too. But they were different. They were ghosts, shadows. But they were still there. I gave each of them their form, as they melted away into my imagination, embedded there forever.

It will be replaced...in a different form. Where memories are different. Where stories are lost. I couldn't hold back my sorrow, and let silver tears pour from my eyes. Where the tears fell, I left my sword, and painstakingly carved a message with my name into the blade. I then thrust it into the earth, hilt facing up. I took one last look at the foundations of home [thread]s, the various abandoned academies, the palaces of FWRPs, the cabins and graves of dead tales. At every one I participated in, or read, I left something special pertaining to that RP/FWRP/etc. At my five homes, I left five different stones that I had made from magic and carved bit by bit. They all said: “Here is the old home of Twilight.” Not looking back,

I opened my wings

away from here

away from the drama

away from the tragedies, the comedies, and everything in between away to other places

to the wiki and Home Base

my new homes

for a fresh start

With misty eyes, I survey the barren land around me. I start walking, my feet crunching on the dead, dry yellow grass. I break into a jog, than a full-speed run, tears spilling from my eyes. Instead of running to my old homethread one last time, now long abandoned, I choose to visit all the threads that have made me laugh. All the threads that had cleverly written puns, jokes, or funny things shared from the poster's life. I visit these, one by one, and silently thank them for uplifting me when I needed it. And now I need them the most.

I place down my laughter, and hope that the Newsfeed will offer a chance to experience even more laughter and joy.

scarletdragon3016

I am not used to writing in first person.

Okay...to the actual thing.

I stroll across the place, wishing it wasn't as barren. I wish there was a letter--something--I could leave behind, with all my wishes and dreams written upon them, as well as those belonging to others. But I cannot, because in the end, words are merely words...and with time, they fade away.

I wish to be remembered. Many carry that wish. After all, if one thinks about it, one's ultimate dream in living is to accomplish something--to make a change in the world that they wish to have pursued after for, and for the future to remember. Though the forums are small, they still have a future...and they are a world.

No words can depict my feelings correctly. So I leave behind some stardust.

Because, the solar system, borne from a nebula, is technically made out of stardust...and like that quote goes, we, too, are stardust.

If everything we know about is stardust, then, doesn't that mean what belongs to us is also that? Our words, our memories, our thoughts, figments of our imagination...?

Because, for me, if something can depict us in a way that is somewhat close to accurate at least, I think that it's...stardust.

So I leave behind exactly that, representing the memories, words, thoughts, and everything belonging to all...for the future to find.
